EXAMPLE:

Was he doomed to never die in battle? Would he ever reach the great hall of Vallhalla? Or, was he condemned to suffer eternal boredom in Helheim? It appeared to be his fate. Sadly, he sank to his knees and the night drew in as snow began billowing around him.

Suddenly, in the distance, Biorn could hear strange groaning sounds and the shrieks and squeals of people in trouble. He quickly dashed through the snow and came to a horrendous scene; a Christain church was burning and nuns were fleeing and screaming in fear. As he looked up, he saw a most gruesome, dim-witted ogre towering over the church and, bizarrely, it had a spear sticking out from its ear. Hungrily, it picked up a nun and threw her down into its gaping cavern of a mouth, it's revolting teeth, like gravestones, grinding the nuns bones.

Bellowing, Biorn charged towards the creature. However, the ogre grabbed him and hurled him into the burning church. Bewildered, Biorn clambered to his feet and looked out. Without warning, the ogre's filthy hand smashed through the roof. Bravely, Biorn raised his sword and plunged it into the slab of meat before him. He clung on as he was lifted into the air and then fell onto the roof of the church. The ogre, who was now furious, yanked the spear from his ear and swiped Biorn off like a human swatting a fly. Biorn fell to the ground. Before he could move, the ogre plunged the spear into his chest. Laughing mercilously, the ogre twisted the spear as he leaned closer. Mustering the last of his energy, and with a final roar, Biorn courageously stabbed the ogre in the eye.

Coughing and taking his last gasps of air, Biorn finally passed into the next world.
